WRITING

I agree with the statement that people always want something more or different. I think that if you think about your wishes, career or something else it can be real. When you dream, have wishes early or later you will have it because you will go to this wish and try to do all what you can to do your wish real. Maybe you can do a wish list in your phone or notebook. When you do it first wish can be like reading the book or to stay at night with your friend and after this you write a big dream like traveling all over the world. I think people want more than they have because they want more experience and happier moments of life. People need different experience in life because if they live one boring life without happy moments they don't know how to live.

I agree with this statement and I think it is cool that people always want something more or different than they have because they can do their lives happier.

In addition to the need for money, people work for various other reasons. One important reason is the desire for personal realisation. Many people choose their career based on their interests and passions. For example, an artist may choose to work in their creative industry not only for financial security but also to express their creativity.

Moreover, people work to build social connections and a sense of belonging within their communities. The workplace often serves as a platform for individuals to network, collaborate, and form meaningful relationships with colleagues. Every job implies communication with people because this is the most important part of our lives. We can not live without social connections.

In conclusion, while the need for money is a significant factor, people work for a variety of other reasons, including personal realisation, social connections, communication, interests. These motivations play the main role of people choose career.

for many ^{other} reasons. One important reason is self-development and improvement of your personality.

Also, creative professions need creativity, which improves imagination. However, people also work to gain respect in society.

Often people choose the profession of a teacher, lawyer, doctor for this purpose.

Unfortunately, when people get what they wanted so much, they stop appreciating it soon. Things they have been earning and saving for so long are becoming unnecessary to them. They often overlook the importance of these things in their lives and when they get them they are disappointed.

For example, modern teenagers ask their parents to buy a new phone of the newest model, but when

②. I agree with this statement. because people are designed so that our needs and desires are limitless and when we achieve one goal, we strive for another. One example of this phenomenon can be seen in the field of technology. As soon as new device becomes popular, people start looking for something better, more advanced or just different from others. The habitual search for improvements is what drives innovation and supports the development of technology. Another example can be seen in personal relationships. Even when people are in a happy and fulfilling relationship, they may still want more emotional connection or adventure. This desire for more can save interest in a relationship and prevent it from pausing. However, there are times when people are pleased with what they have. For example, when people achieve a goal or fulfill a wish they ~~may~~ could feel a sense of satisfaction. That doesn't mean that we are not open to new experiences or something like this, but it says that there are times when people can be glad with what they have.

In conclusion I want to say that we are constantly driven by the desire for more, better and different from others. But it's also important to recognize that there are times when we can be happy with what we have.
